undergo a revolution in 1989, a popular national movement led to large demonstrations in favor of democratic reforms. Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping (1982-1987) had developed the concept of socialism with Chinese characteristics and enacted local market economy reforms around 1984, but the policy had stalled.

In 1989, people throughout the world challenged governments and social regimes they found repressive. As Padraic Kenney argues in 1989: Democratic

Revolutions at Cold War's End, these diverse protests marked 1989 as "a year that has become emblematic of the
