Crown Prince Rupprecht, heir to the throne of Bavaria, spent more time fighting the British Expeditionary Force than any senior German commander of World War I. He was the nemesis of BEF commanders Sir John French and Douglas Haig. Rupprecht commanded the Sixth Army at Ypres in 1914 and Artois in 1915.

Book Review: Haig's Enemy

Crown Prince Rupprecht I selected Haig's Enemy to review because I knew next to nothing about either Crown Prince Rupprecht (1869-1955) of Bavaria or his role in the Great War. In August of 1914 Rupprecht's counterpart, young Wilhelm of Prussia, had been the crown prince since he was six, while Rupprecht was just getting used to being one.
