~~Music Arranging and Orchestration by
John Cacavas~~

In modern classical music, composers almost invariably orchestrate their own work. However, in musical theatre, film music and other commercial media, it is customary to use orchestrators and arrangers to one degree or another, since time constraints and/or the level of training of composers may preclude them orchestrating the music themselves.

~~How to Orchestrate and Arrange Music~~
Orchestration is the art and craft of arranging a musical composition for performance by an orchestra or other ensemble. Orchestrators are often used in film and television, not because composers do not know how to orchestrate their own music for orchestra, but because of the time constraints.

Well composed music will always translate better to the orchestra, so take the time and make sure you're happy with the notes before you start deciding which instruments should play them. Balance During orchestra rehearsals, a large percentage of time is spent on adjusting the dynamic levels of individual instrument parts to assure that all parts are audible and an even, balanced texture is ...

I'd say that orchestration is more complex, with more invention and generation of new, separate parts rather than harmonizing of existing parts or melodies. It's probably a spectrum of complexity and invention, with orchestration on one end, and arranging on the other. Edit: I may be wrong.

Music arrangement takes the original composition then adapts and develops it. It may be given different instruments or voices, re-harmonization, additions, modulations and paraphrasing. With music orchestration, the musical substance remains essentially unchanged, but the melodic lines are given different voices.

The orchestration book had been copyrighted in 1975, and was only being sold here as used. Fortunately, I was able to purchase an unbattered copy for under $30. Some of the other used book prices are very, very high probably because Cacavas is a famous, well-known composer, recording artist, arranger having done many, many works of television theme songs.

In music, an arrangement is a musical reconceptualization of a previously composed work. It may differ from the original work by means of reharmonization, melodic paraphrasing, orchestration, or development of the formal structure. Arranging differs from orchestration in that the latter process is limited to the assignment of notes to instruments for performance by an orchestra, concert band, or other musical ensemble. Arranging "involves adding compositional techniques, such as ...
