~~SOIL—Proofreading guidelines~~

The University's guidelines about proof-reading are reproduced below. The University does not offer a proof-reading service to students nor does it recommend the use of any proof-reading services. Proof-reading is the final stage of producing a piece of written work and therefore, whenever possible, the University believes that students should carry out their own proof-reading.

Give it a rest. If time allows, set your text aside for a few hours (or days) after you've finished composing it, then proofread it with fresh eyes. Rather than remembering the perfect paper you meant to write and projecting this onto your work, you're more likely to see what you've actually written and be able to improve it.; Look for one type of problem at a time.

~~Proofreading Guidelines—AUT~~

Proof reading is an integral part of the process of producing academic writing, and therefore you are expected to have proof read your work. Check De Montfort University Guidelines for more information.

~~Proofreading Guidelines | Bookshare~~
The proofreading process becomes more efficient as you develop and practice a systematic strategy. You'll learn to identify the specific areas of your own writing that need careful attention, and knowing that you have a sound method for finding errors will help you to focus more on developing your ideas while you are drafting the paper.

If you're submitting an academic paper, then you've probably been instructed to follow a style guide. A style guide dictates how to format your paper, how your references should appear, and many other details, such as how to handle abbreviations, spelling and punctuation when there is more than one “right” way.
