Supplement Facts: The FDA regulates both conventional foods and dietary supplements, and each category gets a separate label — “Nutrition Facts” for the former and “Supplement Facts” for the latter. But the difference isn’t always intuitive: Nutrition bars sometimes appear in both categories, and the same goes for some sports supplements like electrolytes, and even herbal tea.

The Federal Supplement is a case law reporter published by West Publishing in the United States that includes select opinions of the United States district courts, and is part of the National Reporter System. Though West is a private company that does not have a legal monopoly over the court opinions it publishes, it has so dominated the industry in the U.S. that legal professionals uniformly cite the Federal Supplement for included decisions. The Federal Reporter series publishes opinions of th
