The Rediscovery Of Mind John

In this major new work, John Searle launches a formidable attack on current orthodoxies in the philosophy of mind. More than anything else, he argues, it is the neglect of consciousness that results in so much barrenness and sterility in psychology, the philosophy of mind, and cognitive science: there can be no study of mind that leaves out consciousness.

The Rediscovery of the Mind, by John R. Searle

I read John Searle's "The Rediscovery of the Mind" in one week, entirely during my breaks. It's not spectacular, but it's the only book I've ever read while on and only while on break from a job. Also, In the summer of 2004, late August or early September, I was working full-time at the University of Minnesota-Twin Cities bookstore.

For starters, the very title, The Rediscovery of the Mind, is a hyperbolic misnomer since the author fails therein to rediscover, let alone discover, anything of any consequence about the 'mind', the book turning out instead to be a summation of various theories and his own highly debatable speculations on this contentious topic.

The Rediscovery of the Mind | The MIT Press

The Rediscovery of the Mind by John R. Searle MIT Press, Cambridge, 1992. The title of The Rediscovery of the Mind suggests the question "When was the mind lost?" Since most people may not be aware that it ever was lost, we must also then ask "Who lost it?" It was lost, of course, only by philosophers, by certain philosophers. This passed unnoticed by society at large.

The Rediscovery of the Mind is the latest --- and the best --- installment in Searle's continuing defense of the mind against those who would try to deny it or explain it away. In reading Searle's previous writings on the subject [1] , I have always been bothered by his puzzling failure to make any reference to consciousness.

The "rediscovery" is also likely to pass unnoticed. But has the mind been rediscovered by the same philosophers who "lost" it? John Searle is an analytic philosopher, with some of the same notions as the positivists and behaviorists who rejected consciousness and "lost" the mind in the first place, but he also does not sound like the kind of reductionist who would have joined that ...
